No person or relation is above nation: PM Modi

AGENCY NEW DELHI, NOV 25

Taking examples from the life of Lachit Borphukan, Prime Minister Narendra Modi on Friday said that "no person or relation is above nation" and his life inspires us to live the mantra of "Nation First" instead of nepotism and dynasty

He made the remark while addressing the closing ceremony of the year-long celebrations of the 400th birth anniversary of Lachit Borphukan in New Delhi today.

The Prime Minister also re-leased the book - 'Lachit Bor-phukan - Assam's Hero who Halt-ed the Mughals' on the occasion.

In line with the Prime Minister's vision to honour the unsung heroes in a befitting manner, today's occasion is celebrated to honour the 400th birth anniversary of Lachit Borphukan, the famous General of the Royal Army of the Ahom Kingdom of Assam who defeated the Mughals and successfully halted the ever-expanding ambitions of the Mughals under Aurangzeb. Addressing the gathering, the Prime Minister started with expressing his regard for the land of Assam which gave brave sons like Veer Lachit. "We bow to the val-orous Lachit Borphukan on his 400th birth anniversary. He played a pivotal role in preserving the culture of Assam", he said.

The Prime Minister said, "India is celebrating the 400th birth anniversary of Lachit Borphukan at a time when the country is marking 'Azadi Ka Amrit Mahotsav'.

Terming Veer Lachit's exploits a glorious chapter of the history of Assam, the Prime Minister said, "I salute this great tradition on the occasion of the festival of India's eternal culture, eternal valour and eternal existence."

The Prime Minister reiterated India's mood to get rid of the mentality of slavery and take pride in its heritage. India is not only celebrating its cultural diversity but also acknowledging the unsung heroes and heroines of its history.

"Immortal sons of Maa Bharati like Lachit Borphukan are the inspiration for fulfilling the resolutions of the Amrit Kaal. They make us familiar with the identity and glory of our history and also spur us to dedicate ourselves to the nation," the Prime Minister added.

'In the thousand-year-old history of human existence", the Prime Minister remarked that there were numerous civilisations that walked the earth, many that seemed imperishable, but it was the wheel of time that brought them down to their knees.

Pointing out the differences between other civilizations and India, Prime Minister said that the world today assesses history based on the remains of such civilisations, but India which faced unexpected adversities in history and withstanding the unimaginable terror of foreign invaders still stands immortal with the same energy and consciousness.

"This happened because of the fact that whenever there was a crisis, some personality emerged to tackle that. In the epoch, saints and scholars came to protect the spiritual and cultural identity of India. Bravehearts like Lachit Borphukan showed that forces of fanaticism and terror perish but the immortal light of Indian life remains eternal," the Prime Minister emphasised. Shedding light on the history of Assam, the Prime Minister said that it belongs to the precious heritage of India's cultural journey.

ABVP holds demonstration Shrimad Bhagwat Katha concludes with story of Syamantaka Mani

On the last day of Shrimad Bhagwat Katha, Vyaspeeth Pawan Kumar Sharma described the queens of Lord Krishna. He told that there were $\hat{8}$ queens whose water eclipse took place on different occasions. When Lord Krishna had freed 16100 girls from the prison of Narakasura, all of them told Krishna that no one would marry them because of local law. Then Krishna did mass marriage with all of them. That's why it is said that Lord Krishna had 16108 Rani. He further told that Satrajit Yadav worshiped Suryanarayan. Then Lord Surya removed from his neck tand gave to Syamantaka which gives eight loads of gold daily. When Satrajit Yadav went to the society after getting the gem, Shri Krishna expressed his desire to get that gem. Satrajit did not give that gem to Shri Krishna and gave it to his brother Prasenjit. One day Prasenjit mounted a horse and went for hunting. There a lion killed him and took the gem. Jamwant, the king of bears, killed that lion and took the gem and went to the cave. Jambavanti is the daughter of Jambavanti of the Ramayana period. Lord Shriram had given Jambavant the boon of being Chiranjeevi. That's why they are still alive. When Shri Krishna went to the forest to collect Syamantaka gem, he came to know that Jambavantji living in a cave had that gem. Shri Krishna said to Jambavantji, give me this gem because it is of Satrajit. Jamwant said for this you will have to fight with me. Jamwantji was very powerful. There was a fierce battle for 28 days. When Jambavat started losing, he looked at Shri Krishna carefully after getting tired and said that Lord I have recognized you, you are my Ram. He repented that I fought with my idol. He then told Shri Krishna that you have to marry my daughter. In this way Jambavanti became the wife of Shri Krishna. Earlier today, the completion of the Katha took place in which all the residents of the colony participated.

EDITORIAL The grave and the ugly

recently had the privilege of attending the setting up of a plaque in honour of an artist known for a distinctively vibrant and colourful style and for being dear to the city. The text was a reminder, in brief, of the artist's career and its landmarks. The language was respectable, not verbose, which can often be the feature of plaque-language, yet the words were laden with a certain gravitas. But so far, it was only an ordinary plaque. What really made it stand out was the lettering. It was extraordinarily ugly even by plaque standards. The most important plaques will often not have a Times New Roman or a Garamond or a Helvetica, or any font commonly used for a common purpose, considering them merely frivolous. Instead they will choose a severe font which was possibly specially invented for plaques for its ugliness. The lettering on this plaque was so powerfully ugly that it seemed capable of crushing every drop of beauty and life out from the artist's works. The layout supported the lettering: the words seemed to have been carelessly thrown at us, appearing sometimes on top of one another, sometimes far apart, creating a sense of chaos and completely defeating the idea of design.

No one objected. The plaque was perfect. It was authority: pronouncements of authority in our country are considered articulated best when they successfully express a contempt for beauty, or levitas in any form, which beauty obviously is in this scheme of things. It is an utterly dispensable thing, for it dilutes high seriousness. (Laughter would demolish it.) Anything serious, which authority is, should be sombre, untouched by beauty and humour, preferably with a bleak outlook, perhaps even painful, frightening and full of itself.

The best plaques have these features. All successful official announcements do, too, and most spectacularly, government buildings. The more recent they are, the uglier. In few places in the world do you get a larger collection of eyesores than in India. West Bengal must receive a special mention in this context. Some of the official buildings here may make you want to cry. Burst into tears, really. And tremble in fear. They embody the very spirit of bureaucracy. It is the same spirit that requires you to still bow down to statements such as: "The situation will be reviewed in due time and action thereof will be notified accordingly." Can you stand up to 'thereof'? Would you ever dare to laugh at it? Would you call it pretty?

CCP creating 'iron curtain between those within and outside Tibet' vibetans are working for a political cause while facing consistent security challenges from the Chinese Communist Party (CCP). Being intimidated by CCP officials directly, Tibetans are unable to talk to their families who live in Tibet and their electronic devices are being hacked and monitored, Inkstick reported. As per the report, the Chinese Communist Party's goal is to create "an iron curtain between those within and out-side Tibet." In order to fulfil its aim, the CCP has been taking several measures, including confiscating the passports of Tibetans in Tibet and the whole of China.

Tibetans who wish to visit Tibet are only permitted to enter with a special permit. For visiting Tibet, they need to register themselves in Lhasa and the authorities then monitor their movement. These activities are being carried out by two primary entities of CCP - the Ministry of State Se-curity and the United Front Work Department. These entities of the CCP have stressed that they will "assist" members of the Tibetan diaspora in visiting Tibet, Inkstick reported. If the Tibetans do not agree, these entities start imposing pressure on them by threatening their family members in Tibet as a 'tactic of intimidation.' China is trying to "gain control" of the Tibetan community as much as possible and they are using their family members as an advantage.

Tibetans have a sense of unity among people as they continue to make efforts for defending their rights and culture. Tibetans have been making efforts to have an international debate regarding their rights and culture while facing external threats, as per the report. The CCP constantly infiltrates the Tibetan community living in other nations by spreading disinformation and re-cruiting informants. CCP has been trying to create a divide between different sections of Tibetan Buddhism on social media sites, like Facebook and Telegram.

As per the report, Tibetans receive phishing emails and fake Chinese Communist Party social media accounts following pages which support Dalai Lama to make themselves look legitimate to unsuspecting users

CCP officials sometimes openly intimidate Tibetan leaders, make use of monetary incentives and threaten people's connections in Tibet to recruit Tibetans to act as spies within their own community, Inkstick reported. China is doing everything possible in both subtle and overt ways as Tibet is important to Beijing.

Serta Tsultrim, a Tibetan MP, has said that 20 out of 45 MPs in the government-in-exile support total independence of Tibet, as per the news report. People in Tibet are forced to give personal documents to obtain sim cards.

Many Tibetan activists living in other nations do not contact their families in Tibet to protect them. Tsultrim's brother was imprisoned in Tibet for explaining no reason. Tsultrim has not spoken about the issue in front of the media, however, he suspects that his brother could be punished for his own political involvement.

Students for a Free Tibet is an initiative started in 1994 after the Dalai Lama received the Nobel Peace Prize in 1989. Students for a Free Tibet comprises Tibetan and non-Tibetan activists and its India chapter was created in 2000 to focus on Tibetans within India. Students for a Free Tibet works in campaigns to free political prisoners and climate as well as environmental justice. In addition, they also give training on strategic non-violence and believe in total independence for Tibet. As per the news report, China continues to shift Han Chinese immigrants to Tibet. Beijing has claimed that Tibet is now around 10% Han, however, the report's author claimed that people in Dharamshala have revealed that Han Chinese immigrants were now closer to 30 or 40% in Tibet. China has recognised 'The Tibetan Youth Congress' as a terrorist organisation. Tibetan Youth Congress works under the Dalai Lama to unite the Tibetan people and to preserve their culture and identity. Tibetan Youth Congress president Gonpo Dhundup said that members of the group are questioned when they visit Tibet.

He further said that Tibetan Youth Congress' general secretary has avoided speaking to his family for several years in order to protect them, as per the Inkstick report. Dhundup claimed that he himself has been targeted as the CCP started obtaining the contact numbers of activists living in Dharamshala and started threatening them.

the old eight glasses thing as an appropriate guideline, if only because it confused total water turnover with water from beverages and a lot of your water comes from the food you eat," says Dale Schoeller, a University of Wisconsin-Madison emeritus professor of nutritional sciences who has been studying water and metabolism for decades. "But this work is the best we've done so far to measure how much water people actually consume on a daily basis -- the turnover of water into and out of the body -- and the major factors that drive water turnover." That's not to say the new results settle on a new guideline. The study, published in the journal Science, measured the water turnover of more than 5,600 people from 26 countries, ages ranging from 8 days to 96 years old, and found daily averages on a range between 1 liter per day and 6 liters per day. "There are outliers, too, that are turning over as much as 10 liters a day," says Schoeller, a co-author of the study. "The variation means pointing to one average doesn't tell you much. The database we've put together shows us the big things that correlate with differ-ences in water turnover." Previous studies of water turnover relied largely on volunteers to recall and self-report their water and food consumption, or were focused observations -- of, say, a small group of young, male soldiers working outdoors in desert conditions -- of questionable use as representative of most people.

a reply. So, to all those who think this way, imagine a day without that one person in your life. Guess, you have your answer!

This 'Thanksgiving' (a western way of celebrating the harvest and other blessings of past year) let's imbibe gratitude in our lives. But how when we live in this digital era where gratitude is just the most ironic hashtag on social media- bragging minus humanity on platforms that celebrate materialism! People today are bombarded with idealized images and temporary fames with no appreciation for anything. Well, we aren't exactly ungrateful.

We just take things for granted. We obligatorily say thank you for small chores but don't expect it as a default reaction for big wallops. Those are our rights! Yeh tu aapne karna hi tha. Better late than never. Start now by noticing and identifying things mushy or over-the-top. We all have our own style. Say what you feel in right tone at the right moment. Even a simple, "mom, good dinner. Thanks!" can do wonders. It's heart that matters.

True gratitude doesn't leave you feeling like you owe other people something. If you've done someone a favour, you probably don't want the person to feel like you expect something in return. It's all about feeling good and creating a cycle of good. Lets have attitude of gratitude.

Digital detox: Question your habits

"digital detox" refers to a time period spent staying away from internetconnected electronic devices such as smartphones and computers. Besides, a digital detox is an opportunity to reduce stress and focus more on interacting with others. It also aids in the prevention of technological addiction. Moreover, a digital detox gives us time to experience nature, exercise, and practise mindfulness. Regular exfoliation helps maintain a healthy balance between IRL (in real life) activities and the digital world.

Social media addiction is on the rise among teenagers and young to middle-aged people both in cities and villages in India. Every time you log into your favourite app, such as Facebook, Snapchat, Instagram, Twitter, etc., dopamine signals increase in your brain. These neurotransmitters are linked to pleasure. Most of the dopamine is generated deep in the midbrain and released in diverse areas across the brain, and it is largely responsible for the diverse behaviours related to learning, habit formation, and other types of addiction. With more dopamine after using social media, the brain needs to perceive the activity as rewarding and repeat it. Such reactions may be felt more when you post your photo or feelings and receive positive feedback. Your brain also uses similar positive reinforcement for other addictions. Virtually limitless social stimulation, both positive and unpleasant, has been made possible by smartphones. Every notification, whether a "like" on Facebook, Snapchat, Instagram, or a "follow" on Twitter, has the potential to be a stimulating social interaction that causes the release of dopamine. In other addictions, your brain engages in this positive reinforcement as well. These are the few symptoms of severe addiction that the majority of people experience:

feeling anxious and stressed

forced to check your cell phone every few minutes.

feeling depressed or anxious after spending time on social media.

I'm interested in the number of likes, comments, or reshares on different social media platforms.

I am afraid I will miss something if I do not keep checking the gadget.

I often stay up late or wake up early to keep fiddling with my cell phone.

Nowadays, it is a curious paradox that we are making new friends on social media platforms with people we have barely met before. We wish happy birthdays and congratulate on different occasions to our added friends on social media platforms, but we always hesitate to call them and avoid face-toface interactions.

Sometimes, after posting pictures, thoughts, and videos on social media, we keep on searching for every person who likes, comments on, and shares them. The interesting fact is that we make positive and negative assumptions based on these likes and comments about who is happy and jealous of my post on social media. Moreover, it is also observed that likes, comments, and shares are based on the notion that if you like my post, I will also like your post, or vice versa. This virtual happiness and sorrow have created a new problem of "mood swings" in society, especially among the younger members of our society. According to studies, compulsive social media use affects people's sleep, work, parenting, and relationships. Many times, people are so engrossed in their mobile phones that they fall on the road and are hit by vehicles.

Due to this social media addiction, people have short tempers; it can also be a sign of an underlying condition like depression or Intermittent Explosive Disorder (IED), which is characterised by impulsive and aggressive behavior. If your anger has become overwhelming or is causing you to hurt yourself or others, it's time to seek the help of a psychiatrist.

Surely, social media and gadgets are not going anywhere soon. The concept of "digital well-being" needs to be discussed among all sections of society. Digital wellness is the ability to develop and maintain a healthy relationship with technology and use it to reach your goals while maintaining positive digital wellness instead of letting it distract or get in the way. If we can control the way we use the technology, we can channel its full potential and reap the benefits.

The use of electronic devices should not be at the expense of one's mental or physical health. We should also think about the idea of "digital fasting," which means not using the internet or electronic gadgets for a specific period of time in a day or week.

This small practise may help us relax our bodies and reduce undue curiosity about unknown information available on social media. Every person should try enriching the habit of lively interactions, enjoying nature, helping others, and positively appreciating others. Ultimately, we have to decide how much is too much for us.

n the present wo method for enhancing body functions. The practice has far more to offer than merely physical advantages This ancient practice can be viewed as a healthy way of life that blends physical and spiritual disciplines by harmonising the mind, body, and spirit. The practice cultivates a sense of unity between the mind, body, and surrounding environment, which encourages conscious behaviour and acts toward other humans, animals nature, and the planet Earth.

"The techniques involved in the practice of yoga like asanas, breathwork and discovering the true state of mind, reorient yoga practitioners to the deep continuity that permeates every aspect of life till they realise the truth that the body, breath and mind are part of the world and not distinct from worldly life. This makes them empowered to act and adjust their behaviour to help the environment and community," says Dr Deepak Mittal, Founder, Divine Soul Yoga. In this way, yoga fosters calm, conscientious environmental stewardship for the benefit of society and the world. He outlines how yoga promotes sustainability. How Does Yoga Promote Sustainability?

At this time, when the entire world is concerned about the implications of global warming and climate change, yoga can help individuals cultivate an internal and external perspective that is comprehensive and holistic. Frequently, environmental issues are not voiced properly or addressed soon. Even when they are articulated, the ideals linked with environmental preservation do not fully merge into the personalities of individuals. This is hardly surprising, as inclusiveness and harmony cannot be considered by individuals who are not internally psychologically tuned. However, yoga can help a person overcome their inner restrictions and undergo an interior transformation. With practise, yoga cultivates the mental clarity necessary to appraise problems with a constructive attitude and to help society

People become more aware of the interdependence of thought, prana, and action via everyday yoga practice. Yoga teaches individuals to take care of their bodies and make decisions that enrich life rather than decrease it With increased awareness of what enters the body and the environment, individuals begin to adopt environmentally

Children below 5 years could be 7 times more at risk of hospitalization because of flu - Dr. Gaurav Garg ATHINDA: The Indian Academy of Pediatrics (IAP) and the World Health Organization recommend annual vaccination fo children between the ages of 6 months and 5 years. Children are vulnerable to the flu throughout the year especially during the vinters and monsoons. It may take about 2 weeks to develop antibodies after getting the vaccination, which is why it should be taken 2 to 4 weeks before the monsoon or winter. Children under 5 years are not only at a higher risk of complications from the flu but can also spread the infection to others in the community aking about the need for Annual 4in1 Flu vaccination, Dr. Gaurav Garg, Consultant Pediatrician Mediprime Hospital said that Flu can infect people at all ages and can sometimes lead to serious complications. However, children under five are at a higher risk of developing serious health problems if they get flu. This is why we encourage parents to give them the annual 4in1 flu vaccination as protection st flu. It is safe and effective. Flu is caused by the influenza virus, and it affects the nose, throat, and lungs. Some common symptoms are cough, fever, chills, sore throat, tiredness, muscle ache and headache The virus can spread easily from a sick person when they speak, sneeze, or cough. Respiratory droplets that contain the virus can directly reach healthy people, or indirectly if they fall on surfaces e.g., the door that is then touched by someone who is not sick. Many recover in a few days or weeks. But children under the age of 5 year especially those who are under 2 years; and those with long-term medical conditions may sometimes become very sick with the flu and need to be hospitalized. Children may have serious complications such as pneumonia and bronchitis because their immune system is not fully developed. Studies show that 11% of outpatient children under 5 years of age with acute respiratory infections had flu in India. The mortality rate because of influenza is also high in children below 5 years of age.

Latham, Williamson share record 4th wicket stand, secure 7 wicket win against India

AUCKLAND : Tom Latham and Kane Williamson stitched a record fourth-wicket partnership to guide New Zealand to a seven-wicket victory against India at Eden Park in Auckland on Friday

The first ODI of the three-match series saw multiple records being broken after the Kiwi duo of Latham and Williamson hammered the Indian bowlers to share a 221-run stand.

New Zealand made a mockery of the chase as the left-hander remained unbeaten on 145 runs while the Kiwi captain carried his bat through, scoring 94 runs.

Debutant Umran Malik was the only positive from the second innings two Kiwi batters and impressed with for India as the pacer accounted for his pace.

Chasing the total, New Zealand got off to a breezy start with openers Finn Allen and Devon Conway finding boundaries from the word go. India opened with debutant Arshdeep Singh who had a meteoric rise in cricket ever since he debuted for India's T20 side. But the left-arm pacer failed to replicate his T20I heroics as he was taken to the cleaners by the Kiwi openers, concerning 25 runs in his first three overs.

All-rounder Shardul Thakur drew first blood as he dismissed Allen after sticking to the fourth-stump line. The batter poked at the ball and the inside edge was gobbled up by Pant behind the stumps.

"Learning to walk for second time in life": Pooja Hegde

Benchard a couple of videos from her recovery journey after she suffered a ligament tear in her ankle.

Taking to Instagram, Pooja shared a video which she captioned, "Two weeks back...me learning walk for the second time in my life it's so funny how you find your mind blanking on how it's done, an activity I've done all my life! #FirstSteps." In the video, Pooja could be seen taking baby steps with the help of a walker and her nurse.

In another video, she could be seen trying to get up from her bed with the help of her nurse. She captioned the video, "Fall down. Get back up, keep standing up #babysteps #recovery."

Pooja, in October, shared a picture and a video clip on her social media handle, informing her fans that she suffered from an ankle injury which resulted in a ligament tear. She was continuing with work despite the injury as one of the posts featured her getting ready.

On the work front, Pooja will be seen in an upcoming family entertainer film 'Kisi Ka Bhai Kisi Ki Jaan' alongside Salman Khan. Helmed by Farhad Samji, the film is all set to hit the theatres on the occasion of Eid 2023.

Apart from Salman, Venkatesh, and Pooja, the film also stars Jagapathi Babu, Raghav Juyal, Shehnaaz Gill, and Palak Tiwari among others.

Apart from this, she will be seen in Rohit Shetty's 'Cirkus' co-starring Ranveer Singh, Varun Sharma and Jacqueline Fernandez. The film, a modern-day retelling of William Shakespeare's classic comedy A Comedy of Errors, is set to release on the occasion of Christmas 2022. She is also starring in Mahesh Babu's upcoming film, which features Samyuktha Menon.

If I have strength, it doesn't mean I can't be vulnerable: SHEFALISHAH the hearts of people. Be it 'Jalsa' or 'Delhi Crime' or 'Darlings', Shefali is mainly known for playing strong roles on screen. However, this time in the film 'Three of Us' she will be seen playing a woman who is vulnerable.

Speaking about her character 'Shailja' in 'Three of Us' at the 53rd International Film Festival of India (IFFI), Shefali said, "The script was originally told to me as a one liner. For a change from strong characters, I play a vulnerable and fragile women. That is the beauty of the character. But just because I am strong doesn't mean I can't be vulnerable. Both are beautiful. Why must one choose between the two? Strength and vulnerability reside within each of us."

"Also, many people believe that I play only strong roles...but people need to understand if have strength, it doesn't mean I can't be vulnerable," she added.

'Three of Us' is directed by Avinash Arun that also stars Jaideep Ahlawat. It is a relationship drama and also features actor and lyricist Swanand Kirkire in the third lead.

'Kantara' star Rishabh says he believes in concept of "All-Indian" movies

Rishabh Shetty has been on a roll ever since his film 'Kantara' was declared superhit. On Thursday, Rishabh attended an interactive session at the 53rd International Film Festival of India. From talking about 'Kantara' success to how he entered into film industry and concept of pan-Indian films, the actor-director talked about several topics during the session.

According to Rishabh, films today are crossing the language barrier. He added that Indian cinema is presented in different languages and if the content connects with audience, the movie will be accepted as an All-Indian movie. He said that he believed in the mantra if a movie is more local and rooted, then it has a greater universal appeal.

He stated that the regional cinemas in the late 90s had influence of western movies. However, today they are incorporating local culture and diversity has given them the much-needed vibrancy and vividity which has been accepted by audience. To support his views, he added that people across India have accepted Kantara despite the language barrier, this is because the audience could connect well with the content.

Margot Robbie recalls doing tequila shots before filming raunchy scene with Leonardo DiCaprio ollywood star Margot Robbie recently revealed a boozy trivia about her 2013 Martin Scorsese directorial film, 'The Wolf of Wall Street', which starred Leonardo DiCaprio.

According to Fox News, during her special guest appearance at the British Academy of Film and Television Arts event, Margot revealed that she needed a bit of liquid courage before filming a raunchy nude scene with DiCaprio.

She said, "I'm not going to lie, I had a couple of shots of tequila before that scene because I was nervous...very, very nervous."

"Honestly, I know it sounds silly now, knowing how big the movie became, at the time I thought, 'No one is going to notice me in this film,'" Robbie noted, according to the Daily Mirror, reported Fox News.

She added, "It kind of doesn't matter what I do in this film because everyone is going to be focused on Leo [DiCaprio] and everything."

In 'The Wolf of Wall Street', the Australian actor played the character Naomi Lapaglia more than a decade ago, when she was just 22 years old. After working on the film, even though it turned out to be Robbie's breakthrough role amid her rise to fame, she questioned if she wanted to continue her acting career, which she recently got candid about to Vanity Fair.

"Something was happening in those early stages, and it was all pretty awful. And I remember saying to my mom, 'I don't think I want to do this,' and she just looked at me, completely straightfaced, and was like, 'Darling, I think it's too late not to.' That's when I realized the only way was forward," Robbie recalled, as per Fox News.
