Prime Minister Narendra Modi today took on Rajasthan Chief Minister Ashok Gehlot and the Congress government in his rally in Sikar. The Prime Minister accused the state government of corruption and being complicit in the leak of examination papers. In his speech the Prime Minister made a reference to the 'Red Diary' that recently expelled minister Rajinder Gudha claimed held details of the Gehlot government's corruption.

PM Modi said, "The Congress has only run a shop of thieves and market of lies in Rajasthan in the name of running government. The latest product of this is the 'Red Diary' of Rajasthan. It is said that in this diary Congress' black deeds are listed".

Responding to the charges the Rajasthan CM Ashok Gehlot said, "I heard that PM gave a speech in Sikar on 'Red Diary'. The position of PM holds dignity. IT, ED and CBI are being misused across the country. Can't they gather information from on the 'Diary' from them?

Are they so perturbed? Rajasthan is being targeted, that there is atrocity here, that there is no law & order here. Rajasthan has seen the most number of raids. Elections are due in three months. They are perturbed as they can see people's mood. So, they are levelling baseless allegations.

Chief Minister stayed away from a government program in Sikar where the Prime Minister inaugurated new Medical colleges and transferred 17000 crores to farmer accounts as part of Kisam Samman Nidhi

Earlier in the day the Gehlot had Ashok claimed that his speech had been cut out of the Prime Minister's program and he wouldn't attend the program. The prime minister's office however clarified saying that the CM had been invited for the program but his office had informed them that he would not attend due to ill health Gehlot however stuck to his claims while addressing a news conference saying he was to make a speech via video conferencing which was kept out. He said "Last night my speech was removed from the program; this goes against the grain of the federal system of our democracy.

The Ministry of Home Affairs (MHA) will handover to the Central Bureau of Investigation (CBI) the Manipur viral video case in which women were seen being paraded naked, molested and allegedly gangraped.

The video which had gone viral was of May 4 after violence between two ethnic tribes Meitei and Kuki erupted in the state. According to reports, the trials will be held outside the state.

The trial would be sought to be held in a court in neighbouring Assam, they said. The officials also said the Union Home Ministry is in touch with both Meitei and Kuki groups and talks are in an advanced stage to restore normalcy in Manipur. The nearly three-month-long ethnic violence in Manipur has claimed over 160 lives. The video of the May 4 incident involving the two women went viral over social media earlier this month, sparking nationwide outrage. The opposition seized the opportunity to corner the Modi government over the issue which has rocked the Monsoon session of Parliament since it began on July 20.

SC extends tenure of ED director SK Mishra till September 15

AGENCY NEW DELHI, JULY 27

The Supreme Court on Thursday permitted an extension of the tenure of the Director of the Enforcement Directorate (ED) Sanjay Kumar Mishra till September 15 considering 'national interest"

The SC further clarified that it will not entertain any further application for an extension in the matter.

Earlier, the apex court put stay on the Centre's order granting a third extension to Mishra and termed the order as "illegal"

The apex court has stated that Mishra will continue to serve as ED director till July 31

Centre on Wednesday urged the Supreme Court to extend the tenure of Mishra till October 15, in view of the ongoing Financial Action Task Force (FATF) review.

The Centre, in its plea to the Supreme Court, said that it may be permitted to extend the tenure of ED Director Sanjay Kumar Mishra in view of the ongoing FATF Review, which is at a critical stage where submissions on effectiveness have been made on July 21, 2023, and an onsite visit is scheduled to be conducted in November 2023.

"At such a critical juncture, it is essential to have an individual who is well-acquainted with the overall status of money laundering investigations and proceedings across the country and also the intricacies of the procedures, operations, and activities of the investigating agency, at the helm of affairs at the Directorate of Enforcement.

Gaya Prasad Thomas, the father of Anju, a married Indian woman who travelled to Pakistan to meet her Facebook friend Nasrullah and got married to him on Tuesday, expressed his sorrow and disappointment at his daughter's actions

Anju, a married Indian woman travelled to Pakistan's Khyber Pakhtunkhwa province and married her Facebook friend there on Tuesday. Further, talking about the same, Thomas said that Anju has no right to take her two children.

"India is a respectable country and I'm ashamed of what she did and apologised to the government. He added that she doesn't have any right to take her two children. Don't let her touch them," he said. Urging to the government of India, he said, "Her action and name are a taint on us therefore I requested to remove my name from my daughter's name." In a rerun of Seema Haider's case, Anju, who hails from Rajasthan, allegedly crossed over to Pakistan to meet her lover. The woman is a resident of Bhiwadi and married with two kids. However, unlike Seema, Anju was granted entry into Pakistan by the authorities on the basis of a visa. "We don't have any relations with her (Anju). The moment she left India, we cut off all ties with her. I had never imagined that my daughter could do something like this. What she has done is very shameful," said Gaya Prasad earlier.

Moreover, maintenance of proper records of the families will go a long way in availing benefits of the Government sponsored welfare schemes and also help the local bodies to provide civic amenities to all the households.

Editorial Noiseless

The robustness of a democratic polity is measured by noise, not by silence. Ar-gu-ments, counter-arguments, debates and so on between those shepherding an elected government and their political opponents have been the traditional hallmarks of a functioning democracy. It appears that the 'mother of democracy' abhors such boisterous clamour. Why else would the prime minister, Narendra Modi, who had accused mocked — his predecessor for being taciturn, seek refuge behind a grey silence? Mr Modi's recourse to muteness is selective. The prime minister is his usual loquacious self when it comes to canvassing or claiming, justly or otherwise, credit for public welfare. But in the event of failures in governance, of which there have been many instances in the last nine years, he retreats behind his wall of silence. So India is yet to hear him speak on, say, the border crisis with China or, in more recent times, on the horrors unfolding in Manipur. Mr Modi's refusal to speak on the latter has now forced the Opposition alliance to do something novel: it has brought a no-trust motion in the hope of forcing the prime minister to speak on Manipur. The outcome of the motion is irrelevant: Mr Modi's government has the numbers to pass the test. The objective, evidently, is to score a moral point and the Opposition has succeeded in this. The irony, however, is palpable. That the Opposition has to rely on innovative strategies to make the prime minister speak, a prerequisite in any democracy, would surely count as a novel feature of the mother of democracy.

Mr Modi's party is equally complicit in the violation of the democratic ethic. It panders to, indeed endorses, the prime minister's strategic silence. Even on a matter as urgent as Manipur, the Union home minister agreed to a discussion but demands for a statement from its tallest leader were ignored. The reason for this chicanery is perhaps the unwillingness of Mr Modi and his party to respect accountability, one of the foundational tenets of democracy. There is no doubting the Bharatiya Janata Party's numerical superiority in Parliament. But an unambiguous mandate cannot be an excuse to dodge scrutiny. This spirit of inquiry is a manifestation of the supreme will of the people. No prime minister can claim immunity from it. Unless of course, Mr Modi makes it clear that he, like a colossus, towers above the rituals and the regulations of democracy. Would the prime minister speak his mind on this, at least?

Static isometric exercise for lowering blood pressure

ccording to a pooled data analysis of the available ev-Additional trials, which was published online in the British Journal of Sports Medicine, static isometric exercises-the kind that involves engaging muscles without movement, such as wall sits and planks-are the best for lowering blood pressure.

However, the results show that 'cardio' (aerobic exercise), dynamic resistance training, like squats, press-ups, and weights, and highintensity interval training, or HIIT for short (episodic short bouts of high-intensity exercise interspersed with short periods of recovery at a lower intensity), are all effective.

The researchers contend that it may be time to review the current recommendations for exercise in the management and prevention of high blood pressure.

Aerobic (or "cardio") exercise, such as walking, running, and cycling, is the type that is typically advised for controlling blood pressure. Previous published research demonstrates that exercise in general is associated with significant reductions in blood pressure.

However, the researchers argue that because this recommendation is largely based on older data that does not include newer exercise types like HIIT and isometric exercise, it is likely out of date.

They searched through research databases looking for clinical trials reporting the effects of an exercise training intervention lasting 2 or more weeks on resting blood pressure in an effort to potentially update knowledge on the best type of exercise for controlling blood pressure. Healthy resting blood pressure was defined as reading below 130/85 mmHg; pre-high blood pressure as 130–139/85–89 mmHg; and high blood pressure as 140/90 mmHg or more. Systolic blood pressure, the first number in a reading, measures arterial pressure when the heart beats; diastolic blood pressure, the second number, measures arterial pressure between beats. In all, 270 randomised controlled trials published between gories of exercise, but with the largest falls in both systolic and diastolic blood pressure after isometric exercise training.

The reductions in blood pressure after aerobic exercise training amounted to 4.49/ 2.53 mmHg; 4.55/3.04 mm Hg after dynamic resistance training; 6.04/2.54 mmHg after combined training; 4.08/2.50 mmHg after HIIT; and 8.24/4 mmHg after isometric exercise training.

Secondary analyses revealed wall squats (isometric) and running (aerobic) as the most effective individual exercises for reducing systolic blood pressure (90.5%) and diastolic blood pressure (91%), respectively, with isometric exercise, overall, the most effective for re-ducing both blood pressure elements

The researchers acknowledge that variations in the types of participants included across the clinical trials and differences in statistical and methodological processes and exercise interventions may have influenced the findings, and so should be interpreted in light of these limitations.

But they nevertheless concluded, "Overall, isometric exercise training is the most effective mode in reducing both systolic and diastolic blood pressure.

These findings provide a comprehensive data-driven framework to support the development of new exercise guideline recommendations for the prevention and treatment of arterial hypertension.

Patricia Scotland was the first woman to be appointed by the Heads of Government of 56 Commonwealth countries to the position, leading the Commonwealth of Nations to deliver on the mandates agreed upon by the Commonwealth Heads of Government, including on climate action, democracy and youth development.

"I think this is an incredibly important moment for us in the Commonwealth having India's leadership. You know that the Commonwealth has been pushing hard for example, for a reform of the International financial institutions and India now leads the Finance Ministers Action Group on this issue. We believe that we should have a universal vulnerability index which takes into account not just GDP, but the vulnerability of our countries", said Patricia Scotland while. "The agenda which has been identified by India for the G20 is very much the Commonwealth's agenda. So, we really are hoping that the leadership that India has shown will enable us to deliver on a number of issues. For example, we know that we need climate finance if we are to have climate justice. The G20 countries are probably responsible for 80 per cent of the emissions. The Global South, particularly the small and the developing states, the island states have contributed less than five per cent of these emissions", she added.

Talking further of India taking the mantle of Chairing the Commonwealth Finance Min-isters Action Group, the Secretary-General said that it really does need India's strength, vision and support, if it is to deliver and improve the opportunities for the disadvantaged and those who have contributed the least to the climate crisis. "We are hoping that India will continue as she has done to strive for climate justice, and she will be receiving more than support. Diabetic people's diet should be rich in ultra-processed foods: Study ccording to an Italian study by the I.R.C.C.S. Neuromed, regardless of the nutritional value of a person's A comed, regardless of the nutritional value of a person's diet, eating highly processed foods which are frequent-ly made in factories increases the risk of death for those who have type 2 diabetes.

The study was published in the journal, American Journal of Clinical Nutrition.

Eat a healthy, balanced diet as your first priority if you have type 2 diabetes, according to the rules. A diabetic person's life includes paying close attention to the calories and nutrients present in different foods. The level of processing of the foods that end up on the dish may play a significant role in determining the future health status of people with this condition, so this alone may not be sufficient. According to reports from general population studies, these products are referred to as "ultra-processed" and are linked to detrimental health outcomes

The study has now examined whether consuming highly processed foods could pose risks to those who are more susceptible, like those with type 2 diabetes. The findings demonstrate that regardless of the nutritional quality of the diet, as demonstrated by adherence to the Mediterranean Diet, high consumption of ultra-processed foods is associated with a significant increase in the risk of mortality, especially from cardiovascular diseases. Ultra-processed foods are products that have undergone often intense processing, made, in part or entirely, with substances that are not usually used in the kitchen (e.g., hydrolyzed proteins, maltodextrins, hydrogenated fats) and generally contain several food additives, such as colourings, preservatives, antioxidants, flavour enhancers and sweeteners. Their main purpose is not to improve the nutritional properties of food but rather to enhance its taste, appearance and shelf life. Packaged snacks, fizzy and sugary drinks, ready-to-eat meals and fast food come immediately to mind. It's true, but they don't represent the whole situation: the level of processing, as well as the use of additives, are features that can also be found in foods that we might consider healthful, such as fruit yoghurt, breakfast cereals, crackers, and a large part of meat substitutes.

The Italian researchers analyzed data from the large Molisani Study and specifically examined 1,066 participants who were affected by type 2 diabetes at study entry in 2005-2010.

"Over an average follow-up of 12 years - saidMarialaura Bonaccio, epidemiologist of the Department of Epidemiology and Prevention of the IRCCS Neuromed of Pozzilli and first author of the study - we observed that a diet rich in ultraprocessed foods exposed people with diabetes to a greater risk of death. Participants reporting a higher consumption of ultraprocessed foods had a 60 per cent increased risk of dying from any cause, compared to people consuming less of these products. The risk of mortality from cardiovascular diseases, which is a leading cause of death for people with diabetes, was more than doubled.'

"One of the most interesting results of this study - said Li-cia Iacoviello, Director of the Department and full professor of Hygiene at the University of Insubria of Varese and Como - is that the increased risk linked to ultra-processed foods was observed even when participants reported good adherence to the Mediterranean Diet. These findings suggest that if the di etary share of ultra-processed foods is high, the potential advantages of a healthful Mediterranean Diet risk be overlooked". "These results - commented Giovanni de Gaetano, President of the IRCCS Neuromed of Pozzilli - may have important implications for future dietary guidelines to manage type 2 diabetes. In addition to the adoption of a diet based on well-known nutritional requirements, dietary recommendations should also suggest limiting the consumption of ultraprocessed foods as much as possible.

re you fed up with not seeing results in your fat loss journey despite putting in a lot of effort? It takes patience and determination to lose weight, but it is not only a strong mindset and intention that will help you achieve your goal. Following a strict diet, restraining yourself from tempting foods, and extensive exercise are all part of it. Still, you might not get the desired results even with all these and you're probably wondering why. The answer is that some very simple mistakes can completely derail your fat loss journey.

Skipping Meals People believe that if you don't eat, you will lose more weight. This is a complete myth. When you skip meals, you starve yourself and deprive yourself of essential nutrients. This will not only have an impact on your overall health, but you will also end up mindlessly munching on snacks because you will be constantly hungry. Eating consistently and in proper portions is the way to go on your fat loss journey. If you skip breakfast and try to suppress your hunger, you might end up eating a lot at lunch. Staying hungry can also cause gastric issues, adding to your discomfort. Consuming 'Healthy' Packaged Foods Ready-to-eat, packaged 'healthy' foods aren't as healthy or weight loss-friendly as we believe. The majority of them deceive us into thinking we are eating a healthier version of our favourite foods when there isn't much difference in calorie or nutritional content Additionally, packaged foods contain preservatives

sugar, sodium, and other ingredients that might be harmful to your health In order to be aware of the ingredients and their

Enhance your learning by writing – Eirini Petratou

HANDIGARH: Textbook learning is not easy. It is not easy for even the most dedicated and talented students to read, comprehend and retain information in such a manner. And for some students, it can be an unfathomable challenge. Eirini Petratou, Senior User Research Manager at BIC Cello shares that from an early age, peoples' brains are inevitably trained to learn through writing and drawing, making it easier for the brain to retain information at a later stage in life through this manner. Writing helps thought flow and structure as well as improving grammar and vocabulary. With the steady rise of digitization, it's important that we continue to keep our brains active through notetaking, rewriting information into our own words, using colors when taking notes to identify key points and translating charts and diagrams into words or creating explanations for them. Retention of information has become a challenge in today's age. As students struggle to learn and retain information from oss their syllabus, the 'Mind Mapping' method has become one of the most effective ways to overcome this challenge. The synergy of pen and paper leads to activating the brain's photographic memory, which can allow for greater recall during pressure situations like examinations. Summarizing an extensive chapter into a single-page mind map can help students retain content better when revising during exan

Punjab has the highest burden of Hepatitis Cailment: Dr. Rajoo Singh Chhina

UDHIANA: Hepatitis, a liver infection caused by viruses, bacteria, or parasites, includes five main types: A, B, C, D, and E. While hepatitis A and E are primarily transmitted through contaminated food or water, hepatitis B, C, and D spread through contact with infected blood or bodily fluids. The burden of Hepatitis C in Punjab surpasses that of any other state, posing a significant public health challenge, while in the rest of India. In regions prone to seasonal outbreaks, particularly during the monsoon season, it becomes critical to prioritize preventive measures against hepatitis. The conditions prevailing during this time make the transmission of Hepatitis A and E more probable, as these viruses primarily spread through contaminated food or water. Unknowingly consuming contaminated food or water can lead to a rapid spread of the virus within communities. Furthermore, Hepatitis B and C also pose a concern during monsoons, especially in regions where these viruses are already prevalent, as stagnant water and poor sanitation can facilitate the transmission of Hepatitis B and C through contact with infected blood or bodily fluids.

Hepatitis B continues to be a considerable concern

Dr. Rajoo Singh Chhina, Director Gastroenterology, Fortis Hospital, Ludhiana, shares "Both Hepatitis B and C are insidious diseases that can lead to severe liver damage cirrhosis, and, in some cases, even liver failure. Individuals with chronic liver diseases particularly those caused by the long-term infections of Hepatitis B or Hepatitis C viruses are at a greater risk of developing hepatocellular carcinoma. If you suspect you have Hepatitis B or C or are at risk, it is essential to seek medical attention and undergo appropriate testing and care to ensure early diagnosis and intervention. Dr. Nitin Behl, Additional Director Gastroenterology, Fortis Hospital, Ludhiana, "Vaccination against hepatitis holds paramount importance, particularly in children

Whatever we eat has a direct effect on our mind and body. Therefore, treatment of every disease is possible by taking a proper diet and avoiding certain things. A sattvic diet boosts the body's immunity, which helps fight disease and heal the body. Shruti Gambhir further added, "We focus on healing the root cause of the disease. Even diseases that are 20-30 years old can be cured within a few weeks with lifestyle changes, a balanced diet, and natural remedies
