Trump threatens 100% tariffs against BRICS countries if they try replacing US dollar

AGENCY WASHINGTON, JAN 21

President Donald Trump has again warned that he will impose 100 per cent tariffs against countries of the BRICS bloc, of which India is a part, if they take any steps to replace the US dollar.

Trump, who took oath as the 47th esident of the US on Monday, said, "If the BRICS nations want to do that, that's okay, but we're going to put at least a 100 per cent tariff on the busi-ness they do with the United States."

They "have a 100 per cent tariff if they so much as even think" about reducing the use of the dollar in global trade, he added.

BRICS is an intergovernmental organisation of 10 countries --Russia, India, China, South Africa, Egypt, Ethiopia, Indonesia, Iran and the United Arab Emirates. In December too, Trump warned BRICS nations against such a move. "We require a commitment from these countries that they will neither create a new BRICS currency, nor back any other currency to replace the mighty US dollar or, they will face 100 per cent tariffs and should expect to say goodbye to selling into the wonderful US economy," Trump had warned. External affairs minister S. Jaishankar in December said India had never been for de-dollarisation and there was no proposal to have a BRICS currency. Responding to a question on immigration, Trump on Monday said he is fine with legal immigration.

Delhi HC dismisses appeal against use of EVMs in elections

AGENCY NEW DELHI, JAN 21

The Division Bench of the Delhi High Court dismissed an appeal challenging the use Electronic Voines (EVMs) Voting Machines elections constituencies. The petitioner had raised concerns regarding the use of EVMs, arguing that Section 61-A of the relevant law requires the respondent (Election Commission of India) to provide specific iustifications for the use of EVMs in each constituency individually.

The bench, led by Acting Chief Justice Vibhu Bakhru and comprising Justice Tushar Rao Gedela, dismissed the appeal, stating, "We find no merit in the present appeal, and the same is dismissed."

The court noted that the appellant had filed the petition requesting the Election Commission of India (ECI) to comply with the provisions of Section 61A of the Representation of the People (RP Act) Act proceeding with any elections using EVMs, particularly in relation to the future preparation of electoral rolls. The bench stated that the appellant argued that the ECI should assess constituency individually and determine, based on local

EVMs should be used. The petitioner further sought a directive for the ECI to demonstrate how it complies with the mandatory requirement of specifying constituency-wise circumstances for using EVMs. However, the bench observed that a plain reading of the provision indicates that it permits the ECI, under nonobstante clauses, to adopt the use of EVMs in the manner prescribed. The ECI had already issued directions and placed them on record, specifying the constituencies where EVMs would be used.

While the appellant contended that the ECI must specify each constituency that the language of the provision does not support this view and, therefore, rejected the appeal.

Earlier, in July 2024, a bench led by Justice Purushaindra Kumar Kaurav had dismissed the plea, observing that the relief sought in the petition essentially sought to revisit a controversy that had already been settled through a series of judicial pronouncements, as discussed in previous rulings. The bench further noted that the petitioner had failed to present any grounds that substantial would justify the Court's further intervention in the matter.

The Congress's fusillade against the remark by Mohan Bhagwat, the chief of the Rashtriya Swayam sevak Sangh, that India achieved its "true independence" on the day of the consecration of the Ram temple, was, unsurprisingly, led by Rahul Gandhi. In a stinging rebuttal, the Congress leader said that the Bharatiya Janata Party and its ideological parent, the RSS, had captured the nation's institutions and that only the Congress had the ideological robustness to wage a battle not only against the sangh parivar but also the "Indian State" by which Mr Gandhi presumably meant institutions partisan towards and peopled by the ruling regime. The equation of the State with one party may seem preposterous. But the charge of the parivar's imprint on many an edifice cannot be labelled as specious. New India, after all, is witness to a sitting judge mouthing prejudicial remarks against a minority community; elected politicians brazenly spouting communal rhetoric; chapters and texts pertaining to, say,

Mughal rulers or M.K. Gandhi getting summarily ex-of omission by institutional representatives is long.

cised from the educational curriculum — the list of acts

The BJP's enthusiasm to highlight Mr Gandhi's reference to the Congress battling the Indian State is meant to drill into the public consciousness the image of the Congress leader as a negative, destabilising force. But the BJP's response must be called out for what it is a diversionary tactic meant to distract attention from Mr Bhagwat's outrageous statement that was disrespectful not only towards India's glorious struggle for freedom from colonial rule but also to the architects of that movement — the nation's freedom fighters. Mr Bhagwat was, of course, living up to the RSS's reputation. The organisation bears the shameful record of having maintained a careful distance from the Independence movement. Even after Independence, the RSS had refused to hoist the Tricolour for a period of over five decades after 1950. Its commitment to religious maioritarianism also goes against one of the foundational tenets of India's Constitution — that of a secular polity. The leader of a quasi-political and ideological apparatus that never misses an opportunity to crow about its credentials as a nationalist force showing disrespect to the most important date on the national calendar must count as more than an irony. It is an ignominious act that every patriotic Indian must criticise wholeheartedly. The greater — collective — task, however, is to fortify the national consciousness from the regressive, revisionist points of view of the kind periodically aired by Mr Bhagwat and the sangh parivar.

Challenges to Xi Jinping, grow from Party, people and PLA

hairman Xi Jinping once looked supreme, unimpeachable and irreproachable. He was perched high upon a pedestal he and the Chinese Communist Party (CCP) erected after he became supremo in

At first, he could do no wrong, as China's economy and military might inexorably grow. However, a lot has happened since then, and the gloss of his aura has rubbed off and is now tarnished.

Much of the reason for that has been Xi's poor handling of the COVID-19 pandemic, increasingly restrictive surveillance and control over the minutest aspect of Chinese societv. unstinting support for tsar Vladimir Putin and his war machine, and his failed economic policies.

Consider too that Xi and a militant CCP have done nothing to endear themselves to other nations - as China grabbed territory in India and the South China Sea, tightened the screws against Taiwan, trampled on human rights in Xinjiang, and subjugated Hong Kong. He has rubbed neighbours up the wrong way and alarmed Europe and the US.

The People's Liberation Army (PLA) has been complicit in all manner of sabre-rattling activities and in bullying others smaller than themselves. Yet the PLA is in a degree of disarray, wracked by scandal, corruption and political interference. Commander-in-chief Xi is not filled with confidence in his armed Furthermore, the PLA seems to be reacting somewhat to Xi's constant remonstrations and "meddling" with the CCP's armed wing. As an example, the PLA Daily recently championed the virtues of collective leadership in an article published on December 9. 2024. Such a plea was a direct insult to Xi, who unceremoniously scrapped recent CCP practice by elevating himself far above anyone else in the hierarchy and rolling back all the advantages that collective leadership provided in recent decades.

When Xi came to power, he insisted that all decisions should "rely on a single voice of authority," something the PLA seems now to be agitating against. Amidst such unfavourable conditions at home and abroad. opposition forces are slowly stirring, although, of course, the country's Orwellian security apparatus prevents anything from breaking out into the open, at least for now.

Willy Wo-Lap Lam, a Hong Kong scholar who writes for The Jamestown Foundation think-tank in the USA, believes Xi is in trouble. Indeed, Lam has identified four key opposition groups against Xi: retired Politburo Standing Committee members; fellow princelings; some military top brass; and Lam noted: "As a result, his ability to shape policy in the financial, foreign affairs and other arenas has been truncated. It might be far-fetched to speculate that Xi, the so-called 'eternal core of the party', might be driven out of office this year, but it is crucial to understand who his enemies are and how they challenge the commander-in-chief.

Xi, a one-man band possessing supposed godlike knowledge and control over every as pect of policy, must take responsibility for the economic malaise in which China now finds itself.

Lam asserted that "Xi's clout over economic decision-making appears to have been reduced." and he cited two Xi-led commissions - the Central Financial and Economic Affairs Commission and Central Comprehensively Deepening Reforms Commission - that now seem to meet only sporadically.

Lam opined that this "could be due to the underwhelming results of the massive program of monetary and fiscal quantitative easing - known to Chinese officials as 'using ample water to undertake massive irrigation' that has been executed since September".

Xi's abrasive foreign policy stance also seems to be undergoing a marked change. His "wolf warrior" approach to diplomacy is being jettisoned as China covets precious exports and as the US and other multinational corporations pull out of China.

Xi even sent an envoy Vice-President Han Zheng to attend Donald Trump's president inauguration on 20 January, the first time Beijing has ever sent an official to such an American swearing-in ceremony.

Returning to the four opposition groups, Lam provided further details on each in his article written for The Jamestown Foundation. Former party heavyweights have been kept under tight reins by Xi.

For example, they cannot hold meetings or travel around China without Xi's permission. There are rumours many of these elders have disapproved of Xi's policy directions since the Third Plenary Session held in July

Interestingly, former premier Wen Jiabao and Li Ruihuan, former chairman of the Chinese People's Political Consultative Conference, sat either side of Xi at the official banquet on the eve of 1 October

This was a subtle signal by Xi that he is receptive to advice from former leaders. Of course, such former luminaries have no power to remove Xi. but China's leader is being forced to acknowledge criticism from elder statesmen.

Princelings are another group dissatisfied with Xi. He has worked hard to marginalize those with "red genes" (the so-called princelings) as he considers them competitors to his own authority. Many have become fierce critics of Xi, particularly those who grew rich from their privileged positions and who moved overseas with their families to preserve their ill-gotten gains. It is reported many are collaborating with foreign intelligence agencies.

Lam discerns that wider social discontent is rising, with anti-party and anti-Xi activities increasing. The academic noted: "These appear to consist largely of victims of Xi's policies, including those [policies] that prioritize state-owned enterprises at the expense of private capital, those that have led to mass unemployment for graduates from high schools and colleges, and those that have created the conditions for the current economic downturn.

Investing in women's health could add USD 400 billion to global GDP annually

FORUM

A report by the World Economic Forum (WEF), in collaboration with the McKinsey Health Institute (MHI), estimates that addressing key women-specific health challenges could unlock USD 400 billion in global GDP annually by 2040.

The report, titled Blueprint to Close the Women's Health Gap: How to Imfor All, revealed the transformative potential of closing the women's health gap. The research identifies nine critical health conditions--spanning lifespan and health span--that could reduce the global disease burden by 27 million disability-adjusted life years each year. adding 2.5 healthy days annually for every woman. These conditions include maternal hypertensive disorders, postpartum haemorrhage, ischemic heart disease, cervical cancer, breast cancer, endometriosis, menopause, migraine, and premenstrual syndrome.

As part of its initiative to bridge health disparities, the Forum has launched the Women's Health Impact Tracking (WHIT) platform.

Shyam Bishen, Head of the Centre for Health and Healthcare and member of the Executive Committee, World Economic Forum, said, "Despite the opportunity to add 2.5 additional healthy days to women's lives, they are often overlooked due to a lack of sex-specific research - only 10 per cent of clinical trials for ischemic heart disease and migraine report such

US President Trump issues executive order to withdraw from WHO

S President Donald Trump, in a major shocker, cut the Unites States' ties with the global health agency, World Health Organisation (WHO), as he issued an executive order of withdrawing from the organisation

According to the order, the withdrawal was due to the organisation mishandling the COVID-19 pandemic and other global health crises.

Trump, who had long been critical of the WHO, had earlier also formally withdrawn the US from the WHO back in July 2020 as the COVID-19 continued to spread.

"The United States noticed its withdrawal from the World Health Organisation (WHO) in 2020 due to the organisation's mishandling of the COVID-19 pandemic that arose out of Wuhan, China, and other global health crises, its failure to adopt urgently needed reforms, and its inability to demonstrate independence from the inappropriate political influence of WHO member states." the order read.

Additionally, Trump stated that the WHO continues to demand payments from the US that are disproportionate to those required from other countries, criticising the financial demands, stating that the US are significantly higher than those of other nations.

"In addition, the WHO continues to demand unfairly onerous payments from the United States, far out of proportion with other countries' assessed payments. China, with a population of 1.4 billion, has 300 percent of the population of the United States, vet contributes nearly 90 percent less to the WHO," the order further read.

Women's empowerment through co-ownership in property cards created under SVAMITVA Scheme

The distribution of around 65 lakh SVAMITVA Property Cards on 18th January, 2025 marks a historic milestone in India's journey towards rural empowerment and economic transformation. This initiative underscores the Government's commitment to strengthening property rights and fostering inclusive rural development. It is a significant step towards empowering citizens, especially women and vulnerable sections of the society, while advancing the vision of a prosperous and developed India or Viksit Bharat.

Historically, rural women in India have been central to agriculture, household management and community life. Despite their significant contributions, systemic barriers have denied them legal recognition of the land they cultivate and maintain. This inequity has restricted women's access to financial resources. opportunities and independence, perpetuating economic and gender disparities. The SVAMITVA Scheme is reshaping this narrative by officially recognizing women as co-owners of land. This transformative initiative grants women equal shares in family property, empowering them both financially and socially. It is a vital step in advancing gender equality and fostering financial independence for women in rural areas. In rural India. land ownership extends beyond financial value-it represents social status and security. Without property rights, women often face financial instability, displacement, and domestic violence. By granting legal land rights, the SVAMITVA Scheme provides women with security and decision-making power regarding land use, access, and resources ne of the scheme's most impactful outcomes is the financial independence it offers women. Land ownership enables access to financial services like loans, credit, and insurance, which were previously inaccessible without formal land titles. This access allows women to invest in their families' futures and establish financial stability. With the inclusion of women as co-owners in the property titles, rural women now have the ability to use their land as collateral for loans. For example. in Pune district, Maharashtra, local authorities actively encouraged women to become co-owners of properties. As a result, the percentage of residential properties jointly or solely owned by women rose dramatically from 16% to 88%. This shift has empowered women to access loans, start businesses and achieve financial independence while reducing property disputes and enhancing economic stability. Similarly, in Madhya Pradesh, the inclusion of women as coowners under the state's Land Revenue Code has had transformative effects. Women like Smt. Shaliya Siddiqui from Harda have shared how receiving property cards through the SVAMITVA Scheme secured their land and provided legal backing to protect their rights. This empowerment has enabled access to loans, agricultural support, and other financial resources, significantly improving their quality of life.

Beyond financial and legal empowerment, the scheme represents a critical social milestone. For many women, property ownership fosters a sense of security, recognition, and belonging within their families and communities. It challenges cultural norms that have historically excluded women from property-related decisions, enabling them to take active roles in household and community governance.By securing land rights, the SVAMITVA Scheme addresses deep-rooted gender biases and empowers women to participate in decision-making processes. Legal recognition strengthens their standing within families and society, offering greater control over household resources and reducing the risk of displacement or rights violations during property disputes. In times of financial or personal crises, land ownership serves as a protective buffer, enabling women to assert their rights and secure their liveli-

Moreover, the scheme aligns with the United Nations' Sustainable Development Goals (SDGs), particularly Goal 1, which aims to end poverty, and Sub-Goal 1.4.2, which emphasizes strengthening tenure security for vulnerable groups, including women. By recognizing women as property owners, the SVAMITVA Scheme contributes significantly to these global goals, fostering inclusive and sustainable development.

The benefits of secure land rights extend beyond individual households. Women who own land are better positioned to access financial services, improve education and health outcomes for their families, and reduce gender-based violence. Empowered landowners gain autonomy over economic choices, enhance their social status, and actively participate in community affairs. This creates a ripple effect, with women reinvesting in their communities, strengthening local economies, and driving sustainable growth.

The scheme's success is evident in states like Maharashtra and Madhya Pradesh, where its implementation has brought tangible benefits. With 13 states already adopting women's co-ownership in property, there is hope that more states will follow suit, extending the scheme's transformative impact across rural India. The scheme's implementation has achieved remarkable progress across 31 states and union territories. Drone surveys have been completed in 3.17 lakh villages, covering an area of 67,000 square kilometres. This comprehensive mapping exercise has unlocked an estimated economic value of land amounting to Rs 132 lakh crore, showcasing the scheme's potential to transform rural economies

As India strives towards its vision of becoming a developed nation by 2047, the SVAMITVA Scheme serves as a critical enabler of rural transformation. By formalizing property rights, enabling access to credit systems, and promoting women's economic empowerment, the scheme lays a strong foundation for inclusive growth. Its use of modern GIS technology and accurate land records further supports development programs and strengthens rural governance.

The distribution of 65 lakh property cards on a single day is more than just a transfer of documents; it symbolizes the government's commitment to empowering rural citizens and ensuring their active participation in India's development journey. By equipping rural communities with the tools and resources needed to contribute meaningfully to the vision of Viksit Bharat, the SVAMITVA Scheme is creating a more equitable and prosperous rural India for generations to come. In conclusion, the SVAMITVA Scheme is not merely a policy but a transformative initiative that breaks bar riers, empowers women, and drives social and economic change. By giving women, a stronger voice, greater financial independence Sushil Kumar Lohani.

Guiding Women Through Thyroid Health Before, During, and After Pregnancy

marks Thyroid Awareness Month, dedicated to highlighting the importance of understanding, diagnosing, and managing thyroid health. Thyroid disorders affect millions and can have a significant impact on overall well-being if left untreated. Optimizing thyroid health before pregnancy is crucial for successful conception and a healthy pregnancy outcome. The thyroid gland is essential for maintaining metabolic balance and producing hormones that regulate various bodily functions Women planning to conceive should undergo thyroid function tests (T3, T4, TSH) to identify any imbalances early. Addressing any existing thyroid issues before conception can significantly improve fertility and reduce the risk of complications during pregnancy. Two primary thyroid disorders during pregnancy are hypothyroidism (underactive thyroid) and hyperthyroidism (overactive thyroid). Hypothyroidism, characterized by insufficient thyroid hormone production, can lead to fatigue, cold sensitivity, and muscle cramps. Untreated, it may result in miscarriage, premature birth, and developmental issues in the child. Conversely, hyperthyroidism, marked by excessive thyroid hormone production, can cause rapid heartbeat, heat intolerance, and anxiety. Untreated hyperthyroidism poses risks such as impaired fetal brain development, miscarriage. premature birth, and heart problems in the baby.

Early detection and treatment of these disorders are crucial for a healthy pregnancy. Diagnosis typically involves a thorough review of symptoms and blood tests. Hypothyroidism is commonly treated with levothyroxine, a synthetic thyroid hormone, while hyperthyroidism is managed with medications like Propylthiouracil (PTU) in the first trimester and Methimazole thereafter, with careful monitoring for side

Dr. Geetika Thakur, Consultant - Obstetrician & Gynecologist, Motherhood Chaitanya Hospitals, Sec44, Chandigarh said, "Every 3 out of 5 patients has a thyroid disorder in pregnancy ranging from irregular metabolism to complications. Proper management begins with early diagnosis, achieved through routine thyroid function tests (T3, T4, TSH). Patients can manage thyroid disorders by adopting a balanced diet of iodine, selenium, and zinc, staying active, and following prescribed medications. Regular check-ups are vital to ensure hormonal levels are under control and to prevent potential complications.

Vedanta to Seek Final Shareholders' & Creditors' Approval for Demerger on Feb 18

handigarh: Vedanta Ltd. said in an exchange notification that it will conduct meetings of its equity shareholders and secured and unsecured creditors on February 18 to seek their approval on the proposed demerger. The demerger aims to create five separate entities focused on aluminum, power, oil and gas, steel and ferrous, and certain existing businesses under Vedanta Ltd. As per Vedanta's earlier exchange filing, the proposed demerger will simplify Vedanta's corporate structure by creating sector-focused independent businesses, providing global investors, sovereign wealth funds, retail investors, and strategic investors, with direct investment opportunities in dedicated pure-play companies.

Vedanta said in September 2023 that the demerger would provide a platform for individual units to pursue strategic agendas more freely and better align with customers, investment cycles, and end markets. It will help unlock value and provide the potential for faster growth in each vertical. Each company will have its own market, demand, and supply trends and the potential to deploy technology to raise productivity. At the same time, the new companies will remain committed to achieving net-zero carbon emissions by 2050 and net water positivity by 2030, the company said.

In November, the Mumbai Bench of the National Company Law Tribunal cleared the way for the meetings of Vedanta's equity shareholders, secured and unsecured creditors. Vedanta has already received a go-ahead/no objection from the stock exchanges. Research firms and brokerage houses have expressed confidence in Vedanta's demerger, seeing it as a chance of rerating. Emkay Research said in its December report on the mining sector that it believes that "Vedanta's proposed demerger.. focusing on the exposed commodity would open up a case for re-rating, as the investors would take exposure based on the outlook for that particular commodity and the business fundamentals without taking exposure to other commodities that come attached as part of the diversified group." The brokerage sees a significant upside in Vedanta based on the expected valuation
